

Conan's Yard Sale

Conan sets up some tables on the sidewalk in front of his studio and has a yard sale. There are a couple of real items, like coffee cups and microphones from the show, but it's mostly fake items from the show (couch pillows covered with nasty stains, cue cards with insulting "ad libs" on them, a sweaty wife-beater t-shirt worn by Betty White with accompanying Photoshopped photo for authentication) and fake items from his home (chewed up ball gag, 50-gallon barrel of orange hair dye, University of Viagra band member t-shirt with his name embroidered on it). He haggles belligerently with buyers. Tom Hanks comes by and Conan gets into an argument with him over prices. Conan has Hanks forcibly dragged away. Someone buys the ad lib cue cards and stands nearby holding the cards as Conan reads the insults at people who buy nothing. Mixed in with the other items is a large dropcloth, wrapped over what is obviously a writhing person trying to get out. The customer has to buy it sight unseen. After it's sold, the dropcloth is removed and it's Hanks, who's tied up with his mouth taped shut. The buyer is disappointed, but Conan insists he has to take him. The final shot is of a car being driven away with the bagged man (Hanks) tied to the roof, as the cue card guy and Conan run after it so he can insult Hanks some more.