

James Corden: Undercover Wedding Bartender

Wearing an extra-large fake moustache that fools nobody, James tends bar at a wedding reception. He is completely incompetent as a bartender - spilling, making drinks wrong, using dirty glasses, etc. It's an open bar, but he always charges guests and puts out a tip jar. He makes passive-aggressive insulting comments about the people there. ("I think it's great that they could even afford chicken on the salary they make.", "It's so brave of that lady to try to smile after all that plastic surgery", "Sure you're at the Table Of Unwants, but they seem to think that you're less of a loser than all the ones who didn't get invited.") He heckles the band and singer until they challenge him to come up and do better. He takes off his moustache, goes on stage, and crushes The Black-Eyed Peas' "I Gotta Feeling". After he leaves the stage, he dips the bride back and gives her a big kiss, then high fives the groom as he triumphantly leaves the reception, while the crowd goes nuts. After a couple of seconds, he sheepishly slinks back in (putting his moustache back on as he does), grabs his tip jar, then skulks back out again.