

Spot The Differences

Two seemingly identical pictures are shown side-by-side, but there are three very subtle differences between them. The first two differences (which are normal) can be found by the naked eye with a little bit of effort. The third (funny) needs a close-up to see.

The “Blade Runner 2049” poster is shown twice. The host points out the differences he can see in the second poster: Ryan Gosling’s gun is different and Harrison Ford’s head is turned in a slightly different direction. The host can’t find the third one until a close-up reveals that Chewbacca is mooning Ford out of a window, and that’s what Ford is looking at now.

The cover of “Art Of The Deal” is shown twice. The host notices that Trump is wearing a watch and that the city skyline is slightly altered in the second picture. A close-up of the second picture shows that in the background, Trump is handing a box labeled “My Soul” to the Devil. And when that close-up is shown in a closer close-up, Trump is crossing his tiny fingers behind his back.
